A Glimpse of Life In the Weather

The last two weeks have been very interesting weather-wise. Last week was filled with beautiful days, warm temperatures, and no rain. This week has consisted of overcast skies, rainy days, and the threat of severe storms. Two very different environments that teach us some important lessons about life.

You see, life is much like the pattern described above. Sometimes, we experience the sunny days—times in life that are filled with joy and gladness, ease and comfort. At other times, we experience the stormy days—times filled with pain, fear, and anxiety. It is easy for us to see God in the sunny days, to thank Him for His goodness and to rejoice in His blessings. However, when our lives are filled with the clouds of suffering and the threat of devastation, we can easily lose sight of God and His care, being overwhelmed with worry and fear. But just as God is in the sunshine of our lives, He is also in the storms. He is there to comfort and protect us. He is there to listen to our prayers and meet our needs. He will not always take the storm away (sometimes the storms are needed to provide the “rain” that nourishes our spiritual growth), but He will always be with us through the storm, to see us through to the other side.

As I look ahead to next week’s weather forecast, it looks like we are in for another beautiful week, much like last week. That, too, corresponds to life. You see, no matter how bad the storms of life might be at times, we always have the wonderful promises from God of brighter days to come. His love is constant and His blessings never cease.
